NEW YORK.

Henry Ward Beecher took an active part in the campaign, not only in the pulpit, but on the stump. He made several telling political speeches. In addressing the largest meeting held in Brooklyn during the canvass, he told the people that he intended to vote for Cleveland and added:

"I will vote for Mr. Cleveland, and I urge every right-minded republican in the state to do it. Why? Is it so that I may go over to the democracy? No; it is to enable me to remain a republican. If Mr. Folger is defeated by five or six thousand majority, people will say that the election was merely a fair pitting of the two great parties against each other and the democrats have beaten us. Elect Mr. Cleveland by 100,000 majority and no one can say that. Every one will know that the republican party has had its hand in that business to rebuke the infamous squad of men who opposed the renomination and re-election of a man because he was honest."

It looks now as though the figures in New York would be large enough to satisfy even Mr. Beecher.

WHAT IT MEANS.

While nearly everybody expected the defeat of the Republicans in New York and Pennsylvania; it is more or less surprising that causes similar in character to those which superinduced a Democratic majority in those States, should have been potential in so many other portions of the country. That there was independence enough among the Republicans of the two great States named above to throw a majority against the "bosses," was pretty generally believed, but that there was enough of this same independent spirit in Kansas to lead to the defeat of a man who was obnoxious to the party, is a matter of no little surprise. It has generally been supposed that the Republicans in Kansas were so completely under the control of the party machine, that they would vote the ticket, no matter how objectionable the man placed upon it or how many lams or crochets might be engrafted upon the platform. But the result of Tuesday's work shows that the contrary of this is true—and herein is the cause of a genuine surprise.

The Democrats, intoxicated by their success, imagine that the political earthquake of Tuesday means the resurrection and restoration to permanent power of the Democratic party. This is absurd. The Democratic party, as a matter of fact, has cut but a small figure in the matter. In all the long list of Democrats elected to office last Tuesday, there is scarcely one who was not elected by Republican votes. It is not a Republican victory, but a Republican revolt.

The following article from the Globe Democrat of the day before election states the situation correctly: "In the political chaos which prevails pretty generally throughout the country, there are at least two facts which stand out in tolerably clear relief. One is that a considerable demoralization exists in the Republican party; and the other is that whatever temporary advantage the Democrats possess springs from the Republican dissensions. It is well to hold these in mind in order that correct inferences may be drawn from the results of the latter election, whatever they may be. The Republican demoralizations springs from causes which have been repeatedly set forth, and it is a fortunate circumstance that their full meaning is in a fair way to be understood. Men inspired by selfishness and greed have in several States attempted to pocket the party and to devote the proceeds to their own gain. To do this they have been compelled to resort to unfair manipulation, which in itself is equivalent to a confession on their part that the majority of the party is not with them. As they happen to control the party machinery, revolts have followed as a natural consequence, and we are soon to be made aware of the effect. It will probably be demonstrated that a continuation of these methods means the election of a Democratic President in 1884, and the knowledge of this very strong probability will bring the party into a condition in which it can assert its full strength at the polls in the next general election and win the day. The thirty-five centers in the States of New York and Pennsylvania, not for the reason, as is usually the case, that they are the most populous commonwealths in the Union, but because in them the Republican dissensions are the most pronounced. Outside Republicans have discounted the probable results in those States, and are waiting for the returns in a condition of unpartisan and philosophical curiosity. When the storm is over it must be that the atmosphere will have been cleared of the mephitic vapors that wrought the demoralization. The bosses will have learned modesty or been put out of the way, while the general spirit of forbearance will follow upon the antagonisms that both the political leaders and the voters have grown tired of."

It is only when a political victory is gained by a popular triumph of some principle that a party is carried into anything like prolonged power, and this is a fact which it will be a reliable comfort to hold in mind in case the Democrats obtain control of the next house of representatives. They will have won it through the advocacy of no unifying and strengthening ideas; and in part for this reason they will not be able to manage their majority. It will prove the most kaleidoscopic arrangement that has ever gained possession of the lower branch of congress. They are all at sixes and sevens on the tariff while in the matter of finance they are about as diverse as the geographical localities they live in. The more the situation is regarded the more it will appear that a congressional al victory will be the most fatal gift that the Democrats could receive. It will not give them the appointing power they principally covet, while it will place on them a responsibility they are not fitted to discharge.

Thus it will appear that whatever ground the Republicans may lose at the election will be in consequence of concessions made by the renominated, while the Democrats can count their gains as flowing from no source that they can rely on in the future. They will not have earned them, and like most people who have not earned what they possess, they will not know how to take care of their property. In the present instance they simply strike upon windfalls in two large Republican States, while their opponents are taking a vacation for substantial recuperation. Throughout the northern States Democratic gains in other localities may be expected also, in consequence of that occult sympathy which has been found to exist during reactionary periods in certain ranges of country.

GENERAL MANAGER WHEELER.

The announcement is made that the general managers of the trunk lines of roads centering in Chicago have tendered to C. C. Wheeler, general manager of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe road the position of general arbitrator. The Chicago Tribune says:

"The election was made without the consent or knowledge of Mr. Wheeler, and it is not known now whether he will accept. There is an impression that he will accept, and will give up his present lucrative position as general manager of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe on account of Chicago as a place of residence. It is understood that Mr. Wheeler now receives a salary of $15,000 from the Atchison, and Santa Fe, and of course the western roads will have to offer him as much to induce him to accept. But they are willing to pay him more than any body else on account of his superior qualifications for the position. Mr. Wheeler is by long odds the best man for the place that could be chosen. He is not only a person of great experience in freight and railroad matters, but a man of undoubted integrity, honesty and great force of character, in whom everybody has the greatest confidence, and the honesty and justice of whose decisions no one would dare to question."

The Topeka Commonwealth says Mr. Wheeler has been elected to the above position for five years on a salary of $20,000 per year, but whether he will accept is another question. The Atchison Topeka & Santa Fe board could not afford to have him retire from the road now, or at any certain date in the future. Mr. Wheeler has no equal in the west, as a railroad manager, a fact fully recognized in Boston, and while the duties of the position offered by the general managers in Chicago are less arduous and, perhaps more congenial the Commonwealth predicts that Mr. Wheeler will continue as general manager of the Atchison Topeka & Santa Fe.

Debt Payment.

The debt statement for November 1 is one of unusual interest, because it shows for the first time the issue of gold certificates of the new series. But this issue in no way affects the amount of the debt less cash in the treasury, which decreased $15,629,181 in the month of October, and has decreased $50,423,418 during the four months of the current fiscal year. The average for the four months is therefore $15,100,000 monthly, whereas the unprecedented reduction during the last fiscal year was at the rate of $12,640,000 monthly. Should the decrease of debt continue through the fiscal year at the rate thus far, it would exceed $181,000,000. Yet the revenue in October was only $32,656,383, against $36,574,219 during the same month last year, a decrease of $3,917,836; the decrease in customs was only $254,000, in internal revenue over $1,000,000, and the miscellaneous receipts over $2,600,000. Probably the complete returns for the month will increase the receipts of the latter class. The decline in the receipts from internal revenue is indirectly the result of the attempt to get the whisky tax reduced at the last session of congress, and of the later operations of the whisky ring, which seems from recent dispatches to have broken up in a quarrel.

Gems of Great Worth.

Among gems the diamond sustains an almost permanent value, and is perhaps less affected by fluctuations than any other stone. Cat's-eyes are the favorite popular, sapphires are admirable and a few collectors rave over rubies and emeralds, but the caprice of fancy or them of fashion soon satiates and the translucent diamond resumes its reign as queen of precious stones. At a leading house I have seen a bumblebee in jewelry, the body being the intense brown diamond that glows with hidden grace. A parure made for the wife of the governor of a western state, a twenty yellow diamonds, the largest of which weighed twenty-five carats, and three others which weighed twenty-five each, the remainder ranging from one to fifteen carats each. A number of clear white stones, used as pendants, weigh six carats apiece, and there are many rubies, emeralds and sapphires of three carats each dispersed among the other gems, while a trifle less than a thousand smaller stones, clear as crystal, and enhance the exquisite beauty of the larger gems. The entire set is valued at $750,000.—New York Correspondence Newark Advertiser.

A Nation's Literature.

Charles Dudley Warner. There can be no development of nation's literature worth anything that is not on its own lines, out of its own native materials. We must not expect that the English will understand the literature that expresses our national life, character, conditions, any better than they understand that of the French or of the Germans. And, on our part, the day has come when we must receive their literary efforts with the same respectful desire to be pleased with them that we have to like their dress and their speech.

Her Big Brother Says Him Unfavorably.

Philadelphia News. First young man—"Well did you make the acquaintance of that strange girl you were raving over?" Second ditto—"Yes, followed her home." First M—"Now did she strike you?" Second ditto—"She didn't at all; she got her big brother to do it."

FORGERS AND THEIR TRICKS.

One of Their Devices for Producing Signatures.

There are few of our city banks which have not at one time or another been victimized by swindlers. The Fourth National, the Bank of North America, the Dry Goods and Grocers' Bank are among those through which sharpers have operated. Detective "Tom" Sampson, of the Sub-Treasury in this city, said to a Star reporter:

"If there is a bank that has not suffered from the tricks of forgers and other sharpers, all I can say is that it is a very lucky institution."

Forgers do not as a rule go for large stakes. Forged checks are seldom for amounts exceeding $1,000, and in most cases the amounts are lower than $300 or $500.

"Do you wish me to tell you how to commit a forgery?" remarked one of Pinkerton's detectives to a reporter for the Star.

"Yes; how is it done?"

"Well, I don't mind explaining the process, for I think the information will be of use to the general public. I don't mean to say that the readers of your paper will make the information available for the purpose of perpetrating frauds; but it is my opinion that it will be of service in putting the unwary on their guard against the tricks of swindlers. In the first place let me show you how well I can imitate your handwriting. Please write your name on this sheet of paper."

The detective handed a sheet of paper to the reporter, and the latter wrote as requested. The reporter's signature was placed so near the top of the sheet that it would have been impossible to write a promissory note or an order above the name. This precaution was taken for the same reason that Jay Gould, Cyrus W. Field, Wm. H. Vanderbilt and other wealthy men, are careful about placing their names promiscuously on sheets of paper. Stepping into an adjoining room for a few minutes, the detective returned and exhibited half a dozen fac-similes of the signature. Every letter and flourish was imitated so nearly that it was difficult to distinguish between the original and the copies.

"That's pretty well done, I suppose you think?"

"I should say so."

"Well, my friend, it is not executed well enough to deceive a bank cashier; as my apparatus is rather primitive and defective, I simply placed your sheet of paper against the window pane, and covering it with another sheet, traced your name with pen and ink. I could not write very well, because the paper had to be held perpendicularly."

"Do the forgers use a window pane?"

"No, but they have a square piece of glass placed in a horizontal position. Then they arrange a lamp under the glass so that a strong light would be thrown through the glass. The paper with the original signature and the sheet upon which the copy is to be made are manipulated the same as in the window-pane process. It is as easy as writing upon a table or desk. Many excellent forgeries have been accomplished in this manner. Even such astute men as the officers of the Bank of England are said to have been deceived by copies of original signatures made in this way."

"Do the most adroit forgers make use of the process you have described?"

"I think the majority of them do; but there are exceptional cases in which the forgers are so expert with the pen that they need no lamp and glass. I know a man who was sent to State prison ten or twelve years ago for forging a check. He was remarkably adept with the pen. The man was a graduate of one of the schools for penmanship in this city."

Dance Music not Intended for Deacons.

New Orleans Picayune. Dance music is not permitted in a church. No one wants to see a good deacon go waltzing up the middle aisle with a contribution box for a partner. The deacon should have a funeral tread as if carrying out the body after the eulogy.

A Cultured Clergyman's Quotations.

Boston Post. A Washington clergyman shouted out the names of several brands of champagne, under the impression that his congregation would take them for Latin quotations, and three deacons gave away their knowledge of drinks by getting indignant.

Horseford's Acid Phosphate as a Brain Tonic.

Dr. L. W. Robertson, Cleveland, O., says: "From my experience can cordially recommend it as a brain and nerve tonic, especially in nervous debility, nervous dyspepsia, etc., etc."
